

ADMIRAL TRYON

Was to Blame for the Sinking of the Victoria.

No Room for the Ships to Turn According to His Orders.

He Was Warned of This, But He Answered, "Let Her Go," and They Went—The Survivors Arrived at Malta and Told How It Happened.

VICTORIA, Malta, July 1.—The British cruiser Edgar and Phœnix, being long to the wind, were unable to turn around and arrived here Friday having on board the surviving officers and crew of the battleship Victoria, which sank off Tripoli, Syria, June 21, in collision with the battleship Camperdown.

At 11 o'clock the survivors stepped to their deck chairs upon which broke from the crowds on the shore and they were taken up and repeated by those on the cruisers.

As soon as the Edgar and Phœnix came alongside, orders were given to load all of them to transfer the survivors to the coast defense ship Ordnance, which was stationed here. The transfer was soon made. Four officers and twenty-one men, who are sick or who were hurt in the accident were sent to hospital, while the rest of the sick and injured are doing well.

The Edgar brought eighteen officers and 140 men, and the Phœnix nine officers and 127 men; a total of twenty-seven officers and 367 men.

In view of the fact that running down of the Victoria declared that the cause of the disaster was the impossibility of turning sixteen points when the ships were only six cable lengths apart. This statement implies that Vice Admiral Tryon, who was the man known as changing column at the time he did, was responsible for the accident.

An officer who was an eye witness of the whole affair, after detailing how the ram of the ironclad had passed under the bows of the ironclad, said that almost immediately after the collision the Victoria began to settle like lead, and in four minutes the vessel was turned completely over, with the deck upwards. The officer added that he did not see a single man jump overboard until the order was given for every person to save himself. Many of the men were good swimmers, but they were unable to get a foothold on the ship before she turned completely over and went down. They were caught in the vortex caused by the foaming ship, and their strength and ability as swimmers availed them nothing against the suction, which drew them down.

LONDON, July 1.—The Times correspondent at Malta says that in spite of the interdict placed upon the mouths of the survivors, he learned that Vice Admiral Tryon issued the order that no one except his son was all his fault. Rear-Admiral Markham realized the impossibility of executing the order to deviate sixteen points while the columns were so close, and did not respond promptly, but the Victoria did not receive any answer to her "stop" signal. The Camperdown obeyed the order. It is asserted that Staff Commander Smith of the Victoria, remarked to Vice Admiral Tryon, "There is no room to turn to port or starboard." Tryon replied, "Let her go." Then it became a question which ship would strike the other. The Camperdown struck the Victoria.

AUGUST 7.

After Feeling the Public Pulse
President Cleveland

Has Decided on That Day for the Convening of an Extra Congress.

He Issues His Proclamation to That Effect
—The Permanent Pressure Was Brought to Bear Causes Him to Yield.—The Furious Financial Situation.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—After a long conference with his cabinet Friday President Cleveland issued a proclamation calling for an extra session in Congress on the seventh of August. The proclamation reads:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 1, 1882.

Whereas the deepest and profoundest concern of the nation is the financial condition of the country, and that the present state of affairs has already caused great loss and damage to our people, and threaten to do much more, and that the public welfare demands that we take a salutary lesson to our farmers and withdraw from our working men the burden of taxation.

Whereas, the present position is largely the result of a financial policy which the country has adopted, and which it is the duty of the law to correct, and that the laws must be executed until so provided, by Congress;

Now, therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, president of the United States in performance of the constitutional duty by the proclamation declares that there is an urgent demand for an extra session of both houses of congress of the United States in the city of Washington, the second day of August, 1882, at noon.

That the session be adjourned to the end that the people may be relieved through legislation from present and impending difficulties.

That those entitled to act members of the Fifty-third congress are required to take notice of the time of the convening of the time above placed.

Given under my hand and seal of the United States in the city of Washington, the second day of August, 1882, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and of the independence of the United States one hundred and thirty-four.

President Cleveland, who leaves the city to visit his family.

This action of the president was predicted in the last dispatches two nights ago, and was anticipated by Secretary Tamm, who declared that the president had decided to him in view of the exigencies of the case and the pressing necessities of the country he would not stand by his former declaration but would call a congress together on an earlier date than that originally fixed by him.

This action of the president is received here with general gratification and the representatives and senators in Washington are unanimous in the opinion that the session will be called on an early date for assembling congress.

There is some question as to how long congress will have to be in session to be able to effect anything, and it is being looked to the report of Mr. Sherman how long the session can be begun at once in the spring. Its organization having been completed in the march of March. The house, however, will delay the organization of the committee of selection, the committee of supply, and the committee on ways and means, owing to the necessity of selecting committees adopting rules to govern the proceedings of the Fifty-third congress and in other routine details connected with the organization of the house.

It is to be noted, however, that organization will be delayed as long as possible, as the nearness of the Christmas holiday often causes the legislature to adjourn.

In the Senate the other men may hold back legislation indefinitely until it becomes a question of physical endurance, and the majority will simply adjourn the session may be forced to a vote. The sense of the Senate in regard to the federal elections will probably then be enacted.

SENATOR VANDERBILT, chairman of the financial committee, said Friday to a reporter of the Times: "I think that he [the president] will repeat the Sherman silver bill. He has constantly urged the president to call congress together at a date even earlier than that set in the proclamation."

"The financial stress in the country," said he, "is due to legislation now standing on our statutes, and the one it wiped off the better."

mind of the people and would not so soon be forgotten. I hoped that there would be no extra session, not for personal or political reasons, but for the public weal. A greater experience with the vicissitudes of existing financial law would have been of great value....
